But do rising prices and lower incomes mean women have to do without? The answer is no. Making your own jewelry designs can be a cost effective and rewarding activity, and can lead to more opportunities later on. Every woman knows what jewelry pieces will fit her sense of style and compliment her looks; but not everyone realizes how easy it is to make their own jewelry. It's strange how some people are willing to pay top dollar for something that they can just as easily make on their own, and that is more rewarding than just saving a few dollars. Consider this: making your own jewelry designs and seeing them become a reality would be a very fulfilling experience, adding value to whatever you produce. Every compliment you receive would be a direct compliment to you, whether it's known that you made it yourself or not. Every time you give your jewelry as a present to someone, it would be a special and priceless gift straight from your heart. So where do you begin? The internet is filled with many resources for creating fabulous designs from beginner level beadwork to fancy silver filigree and exquisite precious stone pieces. This attitude, found in the love and desire in making custom jewelry, In fact, can also be applied to creating wealth in this poor economy of ours.,,How to make beaded bracelets with correct wrist measurements can be quite an interesting challenge. The best way to measure an individual for a beaded bracelet is to use a standard seamstress measuring tape and measure the intended wrist. Add an additional $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ inch allowance at each end of the bracelet in order that the final length includes the fastener when working with smaller beads. The larger chunky type beads will require more length, usually three times as much as they use more space when they encircle the wrist. Filler beads may cut down the measurement by an inch or less. I do not know what type of handmade beaded jewelry you make, however, I do bead weaving. The most difficult challenge which I seem to face is being creative in the fastener department. I make my own fasteners. You may want to consider doing the same if you are having problems finding commercial fasteners to accommodate the style and design of the bracelet. I have hand beaded the lead chain on which the hook or clasp will latch onto. The hook or the clasp is tested to be certain it lies correctly between the beads in the beaded chain loop to insure the bracelet remains on the wrist. A touch of glue adds security. The weave design offers challenges for creative threading for fasteners. I try to make it easy for the wearer to attach the bracelet to their wrist with one hand. It is a nuisance fighting a balancing act trying to stabilize the bracelet from falling away from the wrist as one tries to clasp the openings shut. The bracelet falling away from the wrist is probably the motivation for the wearer to prefer stretch bracelets. There are some beautiful stretch beaded bracelets to make. The most common wrist measurement for women is seven inches. It has been my experience finding wrists to be larger than this measurement. Eight inches seems to be a safer measurement and easier to sell. You can make bracelets as long as ten inches. If you like making seven inches you may consider this size for children. Ribbon, leather, twine, and velvet or rope cord can be tie fasteners. The advantage for the wearer is mother or a family member is always available to tie the bracelet into place. Ankle bracelets start at nine inches working up to eleven inches. It reminds me of sock sizes which are packaged as one size will fit 9-11. Again, unless you make several varieties of anklets in different sizes it would be to your advantage to also consider ties and stretch nylon. With my type of beading or because of my jewelry interests, I do not make bracelets for men. However, the wrists of men are usually one inch larger than the wrists of women. Their size starts at eight inches and enlarges up to eleven inches. When preparing for arts and crafts shows or other types of similar events there are some quick solutions as to how to make beaded bracelets with correct wrist measurements: Make several of each size in order that the customer can find their proper fit. Make ties and extension leads with leather, cord, stretch elastic, chain, ribbon, or finished fabric and plastic strips. The extension choices are determined by the type of materials used in the bracelet construction. Measure the wrist of the customer. Make a simple bracelet for your customer while he or she shops. A good seller is to include their name or initials in the finished product. The customer will be very happy with a bracelet that was personally designed and assembled by a jewelry artist. How to make beaded bracelets with correct wrist measurement is one professional step to being an outstanding artist professional. You can contact me direct on.,, Friendship bracelets have long been a symbol of a valued relationship. The history of sharing friendship bracelets goes back thousands of years. With an origin in Native American culture, handing on a bracelet demonstrated that a friendship is knotted tightly and cannot be easily broken. With "work" such an important part of the culture, making a wrist or ankle band recognised how important the friendship was. A valued friend would never take off a bracelet. They would wear it until it was thread bare and dropped off. This acknowledged the friends "work" and represented a true bond. During the seventies, making friendship bands migrated into western culture. For the last forty years friendship bracelets have been made in schools, at camps for craft and even just for fun. Young girl guides can make them as part of their jewellery badge and then hand them onto their friends. There are so many books and websites which show how western society has embraced the humble knotted string. The range of styles and patterns that can be made seems to be limitless. These bands also have a very real value for people in developing communities. Heading over to Manilla in the Philippines, more than five thousand miles from the origin of the friendship bracelet, there are groups of women happily knotting colourful thread into unique handmade pieces. Why are they happy? They are happy because making these bands, has given them their own business. They can put food on the table and their children can go to school. They also set their own hours and work from home. In a poor community, these benefits are significant and far better than what their neighbours' experience. With no spare money, starting a business would normally be impossible. However, through local Non-Government Organisations (NGO's), the women are able to receive a business loan. This money helps them to buy thread and other materials for startup. The NGO also help them setup a budget and repayment plan so that within a very short time, the loan has been repaid and the women have an independent business. This process has resulted in a network of businesses all making unique string bracelets. To help promote their product the women form their own co-operatives. The goal for the co-operative is two-fold. First, find long-term sustainable markets for their products. Second, share their stories with others to bring awareness about the difficulties in their communities. Both these goals can be satisfied through the army of moms, dads and kids that every year hit the pavement to fundraise money. But for most just the thought of fundraising starts the groaning - "oh no not again." Fundraising with a social conscience on the other hand teaches about the story of our global community. These are lessons that have been forgotten for such a long time, but need to be learned from an early age. The best thing about fundraising with friendship bracelets is that it recognises both the work to make the bands and values a relationship in sharing the story. It's like the hand of friendship has been extended across the sea. When the first young America Indian handed her bracelet onto a friend, she would never imagined that a simple friendship bracelet would be a symbol of unity in a world that is struggling with globalisation. For the last millennium they have been called. Today the label is its identity., Fashion Jewelry Designs from around the world at your fingertips, The larger chunky type beads will require more length, Nothing is better than a good demo video.
